Title: Longitudinal analysis of teacher education: The case of history teachers

Committee Members: Daniel Davis, Ph.D., Philip Tate, Ph.D.,
Marilyn Cochran-Smith, Ph.D.

Content and Methodology: This dissertation examined through a constructivist lens the development of social studies teachers' beliefs and practices related to teaching history. Through a longitudinal multiple-case study, four history teachers were followed from their student teaching through their first year in the classroom. Qualitative methods were employed to analyze interviews, classroom observations, classroom artifacts, and teacher reflections.
